Opera star Anna Netrebko covers new ground on 'Verdi'

The noted soprano describes her latest album, a tribute to the famed composer, as 'a big risk'

Elysa Gardner
@ElysaGardner
USA TODAY

Anna Netrebko was singing the title role in a 2011 production of Donizetti's Anna Bolena when she had a revelation. "I was being all furious and desperate" in portraying the doomed queen, Netrebko recalls. "And I thought, 'I should try to sing Lady Macbeth!'"

Shakespeare's most notorious female character is one of five roles the Russian soprano tackles for the first time on her new album, Verdi, a tribute to the composer, whose bicentenary is this year.

Known outside the opera world for her sultry beauty and love of fashion ("You will not see me dressed in plain, modest outfits," she quips), Netrebko, 41, describes her latest artistic venture as "an experiment, and a big risk. I went on pure intuition."

Lady Macbeth, whom she will introduce onstage in June at the Munich Opera Festival, with the Bavarian State Opera, then bring to the Metropolitan Opera in New York in its 2014-15 season — was particularly challenging. The first time she tried to record the famous sleepwalking aria Una macchia è qui tuttora, "I knew the character wasn't there."

She spent several months studying the part. "It's a fascinating character. I don't think she was evil. Macbeth was bad; he could do these terrible things and live with it. She couldn't."

Don Carlo's Elisabetta and Elena, from the more obscure Fedra, Stabat Mater, proved more technically demanding. The latter required "an enormous range," while "Elisabetta is more for a spinto voice, which I'm just now approaching."

Though Netrebko is generally considered a lyric, or lighter, soprano, her lush voice has the fuller quality associated with a spinto.

The dramatic Verdi roles featured on the album accommodate this, and she plans to incorporate more of them into her repertoire. She will sing Leonora in Il Trovatore at a Berliner Staatsoper production this November and December.

In the more immediate future,

"You will not see me dressed in plain, modest outfits."
— Anna Netrebko

Netrebko is set to star in the Met's Sept. 23 performance of Tchaikovsky's Eugene Onegin, making her the first soprano ever to sing leading roles in three consecutive opening nights. She opened the 2011 and 2012 seasons with Anna Bolena and another Donizetti opera, L'Elisir d'Amore, respectively.

Peter Gell, the Met's general manager, likens Netrebko to Maria Callas in her range and theatrical prowess. "She's a remarkably courageous performer: Not only is her voice beautiful, but she's a daring actress who makes an immediate connection with the public. Very few singers in opera achieve that."

Netrebko, who lives primarily in Vienna and New York, acknowledges having mixed feelings about the frequent travel her job requires. She has a son, Tiago, with longtime partner Erwin Schrott, a bass-baritone. "Tiago turns 5 in September, and he is the love of my life," she says wistfully. "To leave him for 10 days is extremely hard for me."

Tiago doesn't share his parents' affinity for opera: "He doesn't like to hear me sing. He does not like classical music, and I don't push him to."

That, despite her high profile, is also Netrebko's philosophy with audiences in general.

"Opera is an exclusive art form, so it cannot be that popular," she reasons. "I just do what I love to do."
