Royals GM says team was involved in several trade discussions

BY PETE GRATHOFF
pgrathoff@kstar.com

CHICAGO

The Royals seemingly made their intentions clear on Tuesday.

They are making a push for the playoffs ... while also not mortgaging their future.

Hours before the Major League Baseball trade deadline, they acquired relief pitcher Lucas Erceg from the Oakland A's, then traded for White Sox shortstop Paul DeJong.

Right-handed pitcher John McMillon was designated for assignment to make room for DeJong on the 40-man roster. DeJong was optioned to Omaha, opening a spot on the active roster for DeJong, who had a short trip to join the Royals.

General manager J.J. Picollo said the Royals pursued other trades but the cost was too great. He admitted that helping this year's team while keeping an eye on the future wasn't an easy balancing act.

"We're pretty happy with the way this went," Picollo said. "Over the last couple of days, we had an objective that we wanted to add to our bullpen. We were able to accomplish that. We also were able to add some depth to our rotation and then add a bat. The bigger thing for us over the last couple of days, we wanted to do what we could to help this club, but we also had in mind our prospect value and how we needed to protect that ...

"(We were) trying to thread the needle of doing both, and it's not the easiest thing. There were certain things we would have loved to have done, but in the end the cost acquisition was higher than we were willing to go."

DeJong, who turns 31 Friday, came up with the St. Louis Cardinals, making his big-league debut in 2017. He played for the Cardinals, Blue Jays and Giants last season before signing a one-year, $1.75 million deal with the White Sox.

In 102 games with Chicago this season, DeJong was batting .228 with 18 home runs and 14 doubles. He also has played second and third base in the majors.

The Royals sent right-hander Jarrod Rosado to the White Sox in the deal. Rosado had a 1.85 ERA in 27 games with Class A Columbia.

DeJong was with the Royals on Tuesday night after making the trip from the home clubhouse to the visitors' at Guaranteed Rate Field.

MORE ROYALS BULLPEN HELP

The Royals' acquisition of Erceg marks their third trade this month for bullpen help.

Before the All-Star break, the Royals traded for Hunter Harvey of the Nationals. On Monday, they added Rangers pitcher Michael Lorenzen (they haven't yet said whether he will start or relieve).

Erceg, a 29-year-old right-hander, has a 3.68 ERA in 36 2/3 innings with 41 strikeouts. He is in his second season in the majors and will remain under club control through the 2029 season.

The Royals sent right-handed pitchers Will Klein and Mason Barnett to Oakland, along with outfielder Jared Dickey. Klein had been recalled by the Royals on Monday and had been in Chicago with the team.

"Giving up three players for one is never the easiest thing, but looking at this year's team and then looking forward to '25, '26, '27, we think Lucas Erceg's better days are ahead of him," Picollo said. "That was really compelling to us and we were just glad we ended up being the team, because there was competition to land Lucas."

Barnett had a 4.91 ERA in 19 games at Double-A Northwest Arkansas. That included 18 starts. Dickey had .269 with nine home runs and 40 RBIs in 81 games with Class A Quad Cities.

The Royals noted Erceg's four-seam fastball averages 98.5 mph, which ranks as the eighth-fastest heater in the majors.

Erceg is expected to join the Royals either Wednesday or Thursday.

Pete Grathoff: 816-234-4330, @pgrathoff

Royals starting pitcher Alec Marsh gave up two home runs but got the run support he needed to earn the victory as KC beat the St. Louis Cardinals in the first game of a doubleheader on July 10 at Busch Stadium.

Royals send Marsh to Triple-A Omaha and outline new plan for his usage there

BY PETE GRATHOFF
pgrathoff@kstar.com

CHICAGO

The Royals added two pitchers via trades this week, and those arrivals will result in changes to the club's rotation and bullpen.

Michael Lorenzen, a right-hander acquired Monday in a trade with the Texas Rangers, will start Saturday's game against the Tigers. A corresponding roster move is expected Thursday when Lorenzen joins the Royals in Detroit.

Reliever Lucas Erceg, another right-hander acquired from the Oakland A's on Tuesday, joined the team Wednesday in Chicago. To make room for Erceg on their active roster, the Royals optioned right-hander Alec Marsh to Triple-A Omaha.

Marsh started Monday, so Lorenzen will be taking that spot in the rotation. "It was not an easy decision for us," Quatraro said of demoting Marsh.

"We understood that we really believe he's going to help us win games here the rest of the year and in the future."

"What we realized, what we think is the best thing for him, is to maybe back off his innings a little bit. He's still going to start some games down there, but maybe throw fewer innings at a time just to freshen him up so that when he does come back up here, regardless of the role, he's feeling more like himself."

Marsh has thrown 105 1/3 innings this season (including four at Omaha). He's made 19 starts for the Royals and has a 7-7 record and a 4.71 ERA. He is on pace to set a career high in innings pitched, so the Royals want to manage his workload.

The plan is to make sure he could reject the rotation in case of an injury or possibly work out of the bullpen if the Royals need him.

"We haven't laid out the full plan, but we definitely know he's going to cut back to somewhere (like) 40 to 60 pitches, in that range," Quatraro said. "To keep him ready in case we do need him to start. If he happens to come back in the 'pen, he might pitch some games behind an opener down there."

"So it's a fluid situation and things could change today. But that's what our plan is right now."

power arms in the bullpen. Erceg has a 26.4% strikeout rate this season, after posting a 27.1% rate the year before. Sam Long is the only member of the Royals bullpen who is better than 21% this season, other than the small sample size from the return of left-hander Kris Bubic.

A front office that dominated last offseason — an executive of the year-caliber winner for Picollo and his staff — just shortened the to-do list for the winter, all the while quite clearly improving the roster for this year. It's often one or the other — rarely both. Well, either that or the cost is often astronomical, and some teams appeared willing to pay the premium.

The cost to the Royals is a handful of minor leaguers — none of their top-10 prospects, though some intriguing arms of their own. I'm certainly not saying the Royals gave up nothing.

But whatever happens this season, they won't conclude it with nothing leftover, either. Those bullpen additions will be in uniform again next year, and one of them through 2029 if they wish, a trickle-down effect that, heck, might even conclude with Erceg throwing the ninth inning at Kauffman Stadium some day. After all, the Royals have five years to see him reach his ceiling, and he's only been a full-time pitcher for three years.

The Royals entered the deadline with a list of two players — their own players on each. On the first list: players they would not trade. The second: players they'd give up if only they could get him some additional years of control in the return.

Will Klein and Mason Barnett, part of the package to Oakland along with outfielder Jared Dickey, fell into the second bucket.

But, well, so does Erceg. He has just one year of control less than that group, and he's a proven asset at the major-league level. Excuse me, an improving asset at the major-league level. He was drafted initially as a third baseman before transitioning to the mound. It means a bit more, in that case, that his second season with the A's looks a lot better than the first, particularly in his strikeout-to-walk ratio (3.15 this season, up from 1.89 last year).

"Sometimes you think you know what's going to happen, but when you get a chance to strike, you've just got to strike," Picollo said, after noting this would be a point of focus in the offseason too. "And that was a chance for us to strike and hopefully lock down our bullpen, again, not just this year but years moving forward."

If this was the middle of December, we'd be crediting the Royals for following through on their promise to become more transactional.

That's the lens in which this should be viewed. Extra lens, actually, because it's not as though the 2024 impact is a footnote.

It didn't make much sense for the Royals to sacrifice a heavy part of a future that includes Bobby Witt Jr. just for a single pickup this season, but it equally seemed a tall task to suggest they improve the 2025 roster while keeping the promise of 2024 before them.

Truth is, I still have doubts about whether the Royals have enough in their bullpen to make an argument for anything beyond a ticket to the dance. I still don't know who throws the ninth inning if the Royals have a one-run lead, and I certainly don't know who I'd feel comfortable protecting that lead. Picollo mentioning Erceg as having future closer potential, but the emphasis was on future. There's a lot to like about James McArthur, but less to like about him throwing the ninth inning on, say, Tuesday night in Chicago this week or Friday night in Detroit.

But, at a manageable price, they definitively have more options for the later innings.

Now.

And in the future.

American golf teams' fashion threads not a hole-in-one but will stand out

Dan Wolken
Columnist
USA TODAY

PARIS – Nobody at the Paris Olympics is going to stand out more, at least from a sartorial standpoint, than the men and women on the U.S. golf team. Let's call it a Scandinavian spin on the stars and stripes. American strength meets Swedish form and function. A wow factor worthy of both Stockholm and Shinnecock.

If you regularly watch the PGA Tour, you're probably already familiar with J. Lindeberg, the Swedish clothing company that outfits world No. 7 Viktor Hovland in distinctive designs and colors that often border on the outrageous. Now, J. Lindeberg is making its next move in the sportswear space, partnering with USA Golf for the 2024 and 2028 Olympics.

You may love the uniforms that will be worn this week by Scottie Scheffler, Xander Schauffele, Nelly Korda and the rest of the Americans competing at Le Golf National just outside Paris. You may hate them. But you're definitely going to notice – and that's very much, pardon the pun, by design.

J. Lindeberg's distinctly Scandinavian style isn't for everyone. Week-to-week on the PGA Tour, for instance, Hovland's outfits are almost as likely to be mocked on social media as they are praised. But they're always noticed.

And for a niche brand that has been around since the late 1990s but is starting to gain a serious foothold in the American market, the opportunity to outfit golfers at the Olympics is a whole new level of visibility that might inspire, could possibly enrage and will almost assuredly sell a whole lot of product that you'll be seeing at your local golf club.

But why J. Lindeberg? In a sportswear industry with so many American companies, how did a Swedish brand end up getting the Team USA contract for a traditional, perhaps even staid sport like golf?

Well, there was a bidding process, of course. But within that competition, according to PGA Tour and USA Golf executive Andy Levinson, was a desire to give American golfers a bold and distinctive look that would emphasize the fact that they're athletes when they're walking around the Olympic Village rubbing elbows with other athletes.

"I want as many people not being happy with what we're doing as being happy with what we're doing," Scott Davis, the CEO and brand director for J. Lindeberg North America, told USA

You may love the Team USA golf uniforms that will be worn this week. You may hate them. But you're definitely going to notice – and that's by design.

PROVIDED BY J. LINDBERG

TODAY Sports. "It creates this 360 effect. If no one's talking about you, that's a lot worse. Right?"

"There's a perception of golf being on that border between serious athlete versus, you know, some type of recreational activity," Levinson said. "And if you look at today's golfers, they're real athletes. All of these guys could probably, and probably did, at some point in their lives compete in other sports. And so when we're at the Olympic Games and surrounded by this fabulous mix of athletes, it was very important to us that we have a partner that is going to outfit our players in a manner that makes them feel athletic all the time and as emboldened as they possibly can be."

With J. Lindeberg's mix of European cuts, sharp-angled stripes and clean geometric patterns that has turned the American flag into modern art, it's fair to say American golfers have already won the gold medal for style.

And even if the uniforms are a bit counterintuitive for fans who prefer a more traditional look, that's OK. Pushing boundaries is part of the strategy.

"We always want to be sophisticated first, and disruptive second," Davis said. "That's how we see our brand. It's absolutely born and sits in that Scandinavian lifestyle field. So we want the consumer to feel cleanliness, fit, technicality, plus a little bit of disruption."

And it's working. Though J. Lindeberg made a bit of a golf splash in the company's infancy with fashion plate Jesper Parnevik – yes, they were responsible for his iconic vest-and-tie outfit – the company's visibility kind of faded a bit after he left the tour.

That all changed when Davis signed Hovland to an apparel deal in 2019.

A Norwegian who played college golf at Oklahoma State, Davis had a conviction that Hovland might be the next big thing in the sport – and not just because of his talent but because he had a personality that would translate well to an American audience.

Hovland quickly established himself as an elite player after turning pro, which meant he was on television a lot – which also meant his distinctive clothing was being seen by millions of people on a regular basis. And whether it was the famous Azalea shirt he wore at the Masters or hot pink trousers or blue tiger stripes at last year's U.S. Open, fans notice and talk about it online.

According to Davis, that has translated to a discernible uptick in J. Lindeberg's business – even though he admits that not everybody is going to want to dress like Hovland.

"It's been transformational," he said. "And it was lucky."

Now, the company's profile is expanding. It has signed athletes in other sports such as Chris Eubanks and 2023 Wimbledon champion Marketa Vondrousova in tennis. Pickleball is a potential area of growth. But the Olympics is going to put the brand on a stage like never before – and depict American golfers in a way nobody has seen.

"For us to have our product on the best players from the United States for 250 hours and TV coverage, or whatever it is with the bridge on the right chest, and that Old Glory on the back yolk and USA on the left chest as an American and military brag, it was something that I had to bring to the finish line," Davis said. "And from a brand perspective, it's a huge elevation for us."

Rahm supports changing selection process

Gentry Estes
USA TODAY

Spain's Jon Rahm would like to see a different format and different way of selecting the golfers to participate in the Olympics.

Speaking ahead of Thursday's first round of the men's tournament at the Paris Games, Rahm proposed allowing each country to select its representing golfers, as opposed to the current format based on world golf rankings.

"There needs to be some guidelines," Rahm told reporters at Le Golf National, "but, like, Team USA Basketball (is) free to choose whoever they want."

The Olympic qualifying process has come under scrutiny this year for excluding some players for LIV Golf, whose three-round tournaments aren't acknowledged by the world rankings.

While seven LIV players, including Rahm, were able to qualify for their country, Americans like reigning U.S. Open champ Bryson DeChambeau and Brooks Koepka of the USA were not.

"I think you need to let each country choose who they want to play," Rahm said.

Golf is still a relatively new inclusion for the Olympics, having only rejoined the program in 2016 after a 112-year absence. In doing so, it has adopted a traditional 72-hole individual tournament.

Rahm said he'd like the Olympics to expand to include "some team aspect."

"That would be extremely nice to share the stage with another player," Rahm said, "to do something different, to maybe what we do every other day."

Team USA's Xander Schauffele, also speaking to reporters Tuesday, pushed back a bit on the idea of a team event in addition to the individual tournament, because it would mean more golf for a tour accustomed to regularly playing from Thursday to Sunday, as will be the case this week.

"I'm a big advocate of don't knock on it until you try it," Schauffele said. "My only issue with it would be sort of the run of events, it being two weeks in a row. ... It would be sticky to do two tournaments in a row, and because of that, you may lose some guys."

Kelce's appearance 'super cool' for field hockey

Tyler Dragon
USA TODAY

PARIS – There's a popular trend taking place at the Paris Olympics for Team USA athletes participating in sports that don't often get the limelight. Celebrity spectators.

Snoop Dogg is making the rounds at several Olympic events. He even has a hilarious play-by-play call during a Team USA badminton match. Flavor Flav has become Team USA's women's water polo hype man.

For U.S. women's field hockey, it's former Philadelphia Eagles center Jason Kelce.

Kelce has more free time on his hands these days. He retired from the NFL in March. He's spending the first summer of his retirement in style. Kelce and his wife, Kylie, are in Paris taking in some Olympic action. "We love sports. We love competition. We love world events. This is such a unique place where the entire world comes together and bonds over competition and sports," Jason said. "I've never been able to participate in one (an Olympic Games) because of football, because I'm either in training camp or in the middle of the season. So, when we found out that we were gonna have an opportunity to go to this, the more we thought about it, we were like, 'Let's take advantage of it now.'"

Kylie is a former collegiate field hockey athlete at Cabrini University, so it's only fitting the Kelces went to support the U.S. women's field hockey club.

The Kelces watched Team USA take on 2020 silver medalist Argentina in its Olympic opener, and Jason Kelce was ready for the occasion.

"We're in France, in Paris, and I love assimilating to different cultures and whatnot. I know this is about as stereotypical as you can get. ... I've already had a bunch of croissants and baguettes too, I just didn't carry them with me to the game," Jason said. "I'm definitely taking in the full experience."

The U.S. women lost 4-1, but Kelce enjoyed watching the team compete against one of the best field hockey teams in the world.

"They played hard, they're a young team, and they played arguably the best team in the world. They had their moments. They played them hard. And the score, in my opinion, doesn't reflect how close it was for a lot of it. Argentina just did a really good job of capitalizing their opportunities. And their goalie, I mean, oh my gosh, diving and saving all over the place," Jason said. "It was a fun game to watch, and I'm proud of the girls."

The field hockey team also met with the former Eagles center. Coincidentally, nine of the 16 players on the U.S. team are from Pennsylvania. The Keystone State ties was one thing for U.S. field hockey player Sophia Gladieux, but Jason's connection with Taylor Swift, who is also a Pennsylvania native, is what really excited her. Jason's brother, Travis, famously dates the singer.

"The fact that I hugged Jason Kelce, who has probably hugged Taylor Swift, is keeping me up at night," Gladieux said. "It's super cool. And I love it."

Wrestling's 'young GOAT' Amit Elor golden

Tom Schadt
USA TODAY

MANHEIM, Pa. — It is not normal, the way that people in the women's wrestling community talk about Amit Elor, who won gold at the Paris Olympics. The 20-year-old is often described as a prodigy, sure. A wunderkind. A phenomenon. But in some corners of the sport, her ascent is talked about almost like it's a rare meteorological event — a 50-year comet, flashing across the sky.

Terry Steiner, the head coach of the U.S. women's wrestling team since 2002, calls her "a generational talent" and doesn't think Team USA has ever had anyone like her, at least not since he's been around. Iowa women's wrestling coach Clarissa Chun describes her as "a young GOAT" who is destined for the Hall of Fame. "I believe that," Chun said. "As long as she stays healthy."

Their reasons for optimism are clear. In each of the past two seasons, Elor has won under-20, under-23 and senior world championships, dominating opponents at each of the three age divisions she is eligible to enter. She has not lost an international match since 2019. And in the 37 matches since that loss, according to United World Wrestling statistics, she has outscored her opponents by a margin of 322-16.

"We don't come around these athletes very often," Steiner said. "She's special."

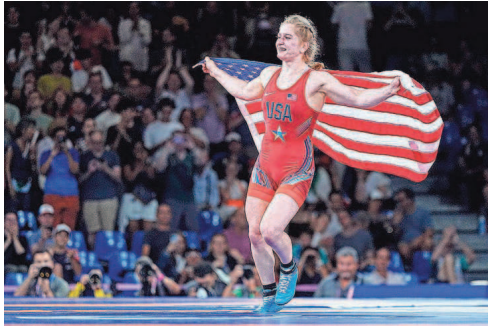

Even if she might not always feel that way. "Sometimes I'm like, 'Why is everybody so interested in me?'" said Elor, who became the youngest U.S. wrestler to win an Olympic gold medal. "I don't know. I just feel after everything I've been through, I don't feel any different."

Just because Elor has been successful on the mat doesn't mean her journey has been an easy one. In 2018, she mourned the death of her older brother Oshry, killed at his house during an attempted robbery. Then in 2022, her father, Yair, died suddenly under heartwrenching circumstances in the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic.

Monday, her first day of competition in these Games, would have been his 67th birthday. "It just happened to be that way," Elor said. "And I really hope that I can make the finals for him."

Start in wrestling

Elor started wrestling when she was

"I still feel like that little kid who just started wrestling," Amit Elor said Tuesday. "But currently, I just became an Olympic champion." SARAH PHIPPS/USA TODAY SPORTS

4½, hooked by a sport that her mother, Elana, would have preferred she avoid.

The youngest of six kids, Elor remembers tagging along to her older brother Orry's wrestling practices in the Bay Area and being immediately entranced. She begged and begged and begged her mother to let her give the sport a try. Eventually, Elana Elor relented, but under one condition. She told her daughter the wrestling club didn't have a program for kids her age, but she could have a one-on-one conversation with the head coach — who was "very intimidating," Elana said — and ask him for a chance.

Months before her fifth birthday, Elor went to the coach's office. He obliged.

Elor said she wasn't an especially confrontational or physical kid, though strength runs in her family. Her brothers played high school football or wrestled, each an imposing figure with a large frame, like their father. Yair Elor immigrated from Israel to throw shot put for the track and field team at Boise State.

Wrestling as a child meant that, until she was 10, Amit competed only against boys. She recalls sometimes feeling isolated and unwanted. Boys would complain about having to wrestle her or make excuses about why they couldn't. In other cases, she said, they would get angry and almost take it out on her, getting unnecessarily physical and causing minor injuries on the mat.

Elor's mother, meanwhile, recalled driving around to different wrestling groups in the Bay Area, trying to find coaches who wouldn't treat Amit differently. "When she started, they were OK, it was like, 'Oh, there's a girl among the boys,'" Elana Elor said. "But once she started beating up the boys, there were a lot of coaches that didn't like it. They would tell her, 'Go easy on the boys.'"

Elor's nomadic wrestling childhood exposed her to a wide variety of coaching styles, her mother said. She also spent several summers in Israel, where she was exposed to international techniques and training methods, and took up judo and jujitsu at different points.

During one particularly intensive stretch, Elor said she was maintaining a regular wrestling training schedule while also incorporating separate jiu-jitsu sessions, every day: "I was basically training all day long. It was wonderful."

It was around that time that Elor started to view the Olympics as a realistic opportunity.

Orry, who is 11 years older than Amit, had come close to making it to the Games. In 2016, he placed fourth at the U.S. Olympic trials in Greco-Roman wrestling. A few years later, after Amit won an under-15 Pan American title in Mexico, it became clear that she would also get her shot.

"I think people will look at her physically and say she's a specimen — so strong for her age — and that's part of it," said Steiner, the U.S. women's wrestling coach. "But technically, she's very, very sound. Very hard to score on. ... She just does a lot of things well."

Mental toughness

Elor said she's "never truly felt my age," which may be part of the reason why she won her first under-20 world title when she was just 17 and her first senior world championship at 18.

Elana Elor said there's also a mental toughness that has enabled her daughter to compartmentalize and continue competing through periods of tragedy and grief — including the deaths of two people who were closest to her.

Elor's mother said they were at a wrestling tournament in 2018 when they received a phone call that Amit's older brother Oshry had been shot in what police later described as a marijuana-related robbery attempt, in which a group of men purchasing marijuana from Oshry later attacked and shot him.

Then, about two years later, Elor was confronted with tragedy again with the sudden death of her father. Although some of the details remain unclear, even among members of the family, Amit's brother Orry said their father had isolated himself at the start of the COVID-19 pandemic due to a fear of catching the disease. He added that the family believes he had fallen victim to misinformation and conspiracy theories.

Amit said her father's death was difficult for her to process in part because of how much he had supported her throughout her wrestling career and the fact that he was gone by the time it took off. Yair Elor died in April 2022, and she won her first senior world title five months later.

"It was really hard to continue after that and just be OK, mentally," she said. "I think just knowing how much he believed in me and how much he supported me is what led me to continue and power through. Because I just wanted to make him proud."

In a sport where anything can happen, she said she often surprises herself with her own performances. At her first world championships, for instance she recalled being "shocked" every time the official raised her hand.

"I hope I can shock myself at the Olympics, too," she said before the Games.
