Community college open for poetry contest submissions

Northeast Texas Community College Honors is now accepting submissions for the sixth annual Northeast Texas Poetry Contest. Poems should be e-mailed to ayox@ntcc.edu by noon on Friday, Aug. 30. The Reading and awards ceremony will be held Friday, Sept. 6 in the Whately Center Foyer at 11 a.m. In order to be considered for prizes, contestants must read their poems in person during this brief ceremony.

Awards for students who have completed less than 50 hours of collegiate work begin at $400 for first place, $300 for second, $200 for third, and $100 for fourth. Prizes for adults (non-students or students with more than 50 hours of collegiate work) are $200 for first place and $50 for second place.

All ages are welcome to participate and poems can be any style or length. Entries should focus on defining Northeast Texas. Winning poems will accent and enliven our sense of the surroundings, the people, the culture, and/or the history of Northeast Texas. The winners, and winning poems of previous years can be found on the poetry page of www.ntcc.edu/honors. In addition to the public reading, poems may also be submitted to regional news outlets.

The Northeast Texas Poetry Contest is made possible by sponsor Michael Whitney and Elliott Chrysler. Jeep Dodge of Mount Pleasant.

"I look forward to these contests every year. I think the question we are asked most in our lives is where we are from, and each year our contestants have provided provocative answers. Thus far, I think we have concluded that Northeast Texas is the one place in the world where one can have a plethora of lakes, robust green fields, plenty of dramatic thunderstorms, and tall shade trees, and still have the luxury of being Texan," Dr. Andrew Yox, NTCC Honors Director, said.

THE NEW TV SEASON

Make a Sunday night date with PBS

After boosting that day's ratings 26%, 'Downton' and 'Sherlock' stay put

Robert Bianco
@BiancoRobert
USA TODAY

BEVERLY HILLS Flat may be the new up at the commercial broadcast networks, but not at PBS. PBS president and CEO Paula Kerger says the public service's ratings are up 5% in prime time year over year — and up 26% on Sunday alone, driven on that night by PBS' biggest hit in decades, Downton Abbey. And she's looking forward to another good year, with Downton returning Jan. 5 and being joined by such returning favorites as Call the Midwife, Mr. Selfridge and Sherlock. "There is some very rich content, and we have found that Sunday night on public television has become a great night for drama," Kerger said at the Television Critics Association meeting Tuesday. Kerger also highlighted news and documentary programs, from Latino Americans and The March to a special on JFK. In September, PBS NewsHour will make some news of its own: It will be anchored by Gwen Ifill and Judy Woodruff, "the first time that two women will co-anchor an evening newscast," Kerger says. In addition, on Sept. 7, the NewsHour will expand with NewsHour Weekend on Saturdays and Sundays.

To tennis legend Billie Jean King, whose American Masters airs Sept. 16, feminism "means equality for boys and girls."

'AMERICAN MASTERS' Billie Jean King, the subject of a

Sept. 10 American Masters film on PBS (8 ET/PT, times may vary), wasn't just the greatest tennis player of her time, she was a fighter for equal rights. It wasn't just her famous "battle of the sexes" tennis match with Bobby Riggs; it was her dedication to equality for everyone.

She was a feminist then, she says, and she still is — and to her, the meaning of "feminism" hasn't changed. "It means choice; it means equality for boys and girls. That's what it means to me. The guys loved it, because I always included them. I still do."

The "guys" to whom she refers were the sports reporters of the '70s, who were all men. Dealing with them was not easy, she said, partly because at the time, she was keeping her sexuality a secret.

King came out in 1981 in response to a palimony lawsuit filed against her. She's glad she did, despite the impetus, but she would never force someone to follow her path.

"Each person has to decide. I would never out somebody, because until you're ready, you're not ready."

APPRECIATION

Keyboard king George Duke defied musical categories

Jazz fusion pioneer's sounds inspire samples

Patrick Ryan

Sitting at a concert with his mother, a then-4-year-old George Duke knew that he saw performing onstage. That man was Duke Ellington.

"I remember seeing this guy in a white suit, playing this big thing, which I later found out was a piano," Duke told USA TODAY in 1997. "He was waving his hands conducting, and he spoke very intelligently and seemed to be having a good time. And his name was Duke, and my last name was Duke. I told my mom, 'I want to be him.' That moment in time set the stage for me."

Duke, who would become a pioneer in the jazz and funk genres, died Monday in Los Angeles after a battle with chronic lymphocytic leukemia, according to his label, Concord Music Group. He was 67.

Over the course of his four-decade-plus career, the Grammy Award-winning keyboardist put out more than 40 albums and collaborated with Frank Zappa, Miles Davis, Jill Scott and Michael Jackson. His music also was sampled by Kanye West, Daft Punk and Common. "It's a wonderful thing," Duke told USA TODAY of his career longevity. "In R&B and rock, when you're over a certain age, they say goodbye to you. But in jazz, you just kind of level off and continue to gain respect, so long as you keep your integrity."

His final album, Dream Weaver, was released July 16 and went to No. 1 on Billboard's contemporary jazz chart.

Celebrities took to Twitter to express their condolences.

"A great musician, a greater friend," record producer Quincy Jones tweeted Tuesday evening. "Funk, Jazz, MUSIC Legend — One of the GREATEST," Justin Timberlake tweeted.

WHY ELON MUSK'S 'HYPERLOOP' WON'T WORK

57-page proposal, while exciting, has holes, some experts say

Chris Woodward and Roger Yu
USA TODAY

The world has had a day to digest Tesla and SpaceX CEO Elon Musk's proposal of a "hyperloop," a high-speed train that would shoot pods through a tube with air pressure at speeds that would take people from Los Angeles to San Francisco in 30 minutes.

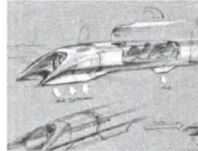

And he is mostly being hailed as a visionary, an example of the kind of can-do spirit that America needs.

But not all think the idea he is supporting is feasible — pointing out that traveling faster than jet aircraft in a tube would be really, really difficult.

After reading Musk's 57-page proposal, Sam Jaffe, senior research analyst at clean technology firm Navigant Research, was impressed with Musk's willingness to release the report with "excruciating detail" and openly invite criticism. "What he's done is amazing. He wrote it and said, 'Criticize this,'" Jaffe says. "And it's worthy of being criticized."

Jaffe responded with some of his doubts about the plan. The biggest hurdle would be dealing with the temperature of air compression, says Jaffe, who has launched a start-up business in compressed-air energy storage. While Musk's estimates are thermodynamically correct, he says, "The heat of compression is always underestimated by engineers."

"To take that heat away from the critical parts of the system, you need a lot of surface area inside the pod. You just have a limited volume of space to work with," he says. "That's what concerns me." Musk proposes a water tank that is attached to the pod and used as coolant. The steam generated from the process would be collected and released at stations.

Jaffe says that the pods may not be able to carry enough water. "That's not an elegant solution. A lot of things worry me about that. It's a hard engineering problem to solve whenever you're pressuring air."

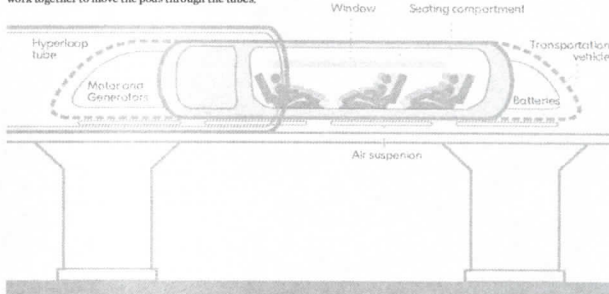

Also, engineering hurdles: The pods would be under a lot of stress. And if the tube structure is elevated, it could be subject to blifting wind. Musk's idea isn't new. Ever since pneumatic tubes using negative air pressure to shoot capsules used them for decades ago — department stores used them for transactions, and newspapers used them to carry stories from the newsroom to operators who would produce metal type for the printing presses — people have dreamed of traveling through cylinders at high speed.

Jay Yarow, writing for Business Insider, says a similar idea for transporting passengers was hatched 41 years ago by a RAND Corp. researcher, R.M. Salter. He called his hyper-

IS HIGH-SPEED HYPERLOOP TRAVEL IN OUR FUTURE?

WHAT IS HYPERLOOP?

"The Hyperloop" is a system of people-size pods that are moved over a network of tubes built over or under the ground — much like the pneumatic tubes seen at drive-up windows at banks. Magnets in the pods and the tubes would work together to move the pods through the tubes.

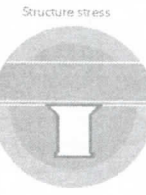

WHY SOME CRITICS SAY ELON MUSK'S HYPERLOOP WILL NOT WORK:

The pod will be compressing air and so heating it downwards and backwards. All that air compression creates an enormous amount of heat, which can damage the pod and its machinery.

The pod would need to carry a water tank, which would provide coolant. But would the pod be able to carry enough water to cool the high temperatures?

If the tube structure is elevated, it could be subject to blifting by winds.

loop a "Very High Speed Transit System." It, too, depended on trains suspended on air running through tubes. He says it faced technical challenges, but there was no apparent insurmountable barriers. His system would have been airtight, unlike Musk's. The idea went nowhere. And Musk is not proposing to take on this futuristic train idea himself, having enough on his plate now with his Tesla car company and SpaceX

Rules would aid used car buyers

Safety recalls' effectiveness would also get a boost

James R. Healey and Fred Meier
USA TODAY

DRIVE ON Government safety officials plan to announce a final rule today that could provide far more security for used car shoppers and dramatically boost the effectiveness of safety recalls.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration mandate will require automakers to have a tool on their public websites that allows anyone to search for uncompleted recall repairs for any car or truck by its vehicle identification number (VIN). Sites must be updated at least weekly. It sounds simple, and some car companies already do it, but it would be the first industry-wide regulation to standardize and simplify the searches. It also would apply to toy vehicle manufacturers. NHTSA's goal is to get more owners to have recall fixes made.

Makers will have one year from today to install the feature, and they appear eager to do it.

"The goal here is to increase recall completion rates through greater consumer awareness. Providing safety recall information on the websites of automakers" is effective and uses databases that car companies already maintain, says the Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers, the main trade group representing major car companies. The companies won't have to list recalled vehicles that have been repaired, just those that haven't.

The 2014 Kia Soul is the least-expensive car on the short drivers' list.

It's overdue, some auto experts say. "It's a great thing," says Clarence Ditlow, chief of the Center for Auto Safety advocacy group. The center, he says, has urged such recall search tools for 20 years, and its website, autosafety.org, has a recall section that links to the recall search sites of the automakers that have them.

Recalls almost never are 100% complete. Some linger for years, only half or two-thirds complete.

About a fourth of all recall repairs are never made. "NHTSA said that 20% of people who don't get a recall done say it's because they didn't know there was one," Ditlow says.

"This is an important development," says Carroll Lachnit, an editor at auto research and shopping site Edmunds.com. "It should make it easier for people buying used cars to know if the vehicle they're about to purchase was part of an uncompleted recall."

Other provisions of the rule require car companies to use the official Department of Transportation logo on the recall letters they send owners. That's to make the seriousness of the action clear, NHTSA says, "by distinguishing the notices from routine correspondence."

Short people have got some cars they can love

Short drivers — folks about 5-foot-6 or less — know how hard it is to find vehicles that let them see out properly and in which they can adjust themselves to fit comfortably and safely behind the wheel while reaching controls and pedals.

To help such folks find such vehicles, Edmunds.com, the car-shopping and research site, has compiled a list of what it believes are the 10 best cars for short drivers.

It's a wide variety of vehicles, with some cars you probably can afford, others, maybe not. Visibility is the key safety issue. If you can't see what's around you, after all, you're more likely to hit it. Common sense.

Except that car designers have little of that sense. Looks good, live with it, seems to be their attitude.

Thus, many cars compromise the ability to easily see out for the sake of what's considered attractive: sheet metal that comes up high (called a high belt line), roof pillars that are thick, windshields or rear windows that are steeply angled or roof designs that create a big blind spot when the driver looks back to the right rear corner.

Some key features to help with comfort and safety issues for short drivers: ▶ Height-adjustable driver's seat, common. ▶ Telescoping and tilting steering column, fairly common.

▶ Power-adjustable pedals, uncommon.

Adjustable pedals let short drivers move the pedals within reach without moving too closely to the steering wheel — less than 10 inches between the wheel and your breastbone usually is considered unsafe. General Motors, Ford Motor, Chrysler Group and Nissan Motor are chief among those offering adjustable pedals on some models.

Edmunds points out that individual physiques vary, so two drivers the same height might fit quite differently, and benefit from the pedal, as well as seat and wheel flexibility.

Buyers should test drive cars and trucks on their lists to be sure they fit and can see out. Don't think you've simply missed that perfect combination of seat/wheel/pedal settings, and it'll somehow get better after you sign on the dotted line. Doesn't happen.

Here are Edmunds.com's favorites for short drivers, in alphabetical order, including the price with shipping for the base model:

- ▶ BMW 3 Series, $33,475
 - ▶ Honda Accord, $22,470
 - ▶ Honda CR-V, $23,625
 - ▶ Kia Soul, $15,200
 - ▶ Lexus LS 460, $72,900
 - ▶ Mazda3, $17,495
 - ▶ Mercedes-Benz S-Class, $93,255
 - ▶ Subaru Forester, $22,700
 - ▶ Toyota Sienna, $27,445
 - ▶ Volkswagen Passat, $21,640
- Edmunds plans to make this list annual, and to make an annual list of cars for tall people.
