Overview

AEG is a multi-faceted energy consulting firm headquartered in Houston, Texas that offers a variety of energy-related consulting services for commercial and governmental energy consumers in deregulated regions of Texas. AEG has extensive experience in working with governmental entities on matters related to electricity and gas procurement, energy risk management, market analysis, analysis and determinations of whether "aggregation" will hurt or help particular end-users, and related energy services such as, for example, EILS and "load acting as a resource" services (emergency interruptible load service). AEG also provides other services such as energy invoicing review and auditing services, dispute resolution, and mediation services with regard to energy-related disputes.

AEG has extensive experience working with historically underutilized business suppliers that have HUB/M-WBE status.

AEG is uniquely qualified to provide these services due to the backgrounds and experience of its team-members. AEG's management members have extensive backgrounds in market analysis, technical, commercial, professional, legal and regulatory facets of buying and selling wholesale and retail electricity, electricity modeling, wholesale and retail gas procurement, energy-related risk-management, and in energy-related mergers and acquisitions and energy-related financial transactions.

TIPS members require practical electricity supply and procurement solutions that work under predictable and unpredictable patterns of usage and under varying market, supplier, weather and customer usage variations in the future. AEG has extensive experience developing and procuring energy supply contracts in deregulated areas in Texas and other deregulated regions of the United States and is thoroughly familiar with retail and wholesale electricity market participants, market operations, market risks, regulatory risks, ancillary services, and market pricing.
