Overview

It started in 1942, in the wake of a World War—American Signal Corporation (ASC) made a pledge to the world to provide first alert and early warning technologies, to ultimately save lives. Our air raid sirens and speaker arrays were the first step to creating a safer world and today, while our technologies have certainly evolved, our mission has stayed the same.

Headquartered in Milwaukee, Wisconsin, ASC has been an industry leader in mass notification since the beginning. Our air raid sirens paved the way for giant voice systems, which heralded digital alerts and today's integrated systems. We've seen the evolving need for innovation in our industry and have been influencers in how these technologies have developed over time.

Our engineers have done more than just build mass notification and first alert systems—we've perfected them, combined them and tailored them to meet the needs of unique applications around the world. From continuous monitoring and first alert systems for nuclear facilities, to giant voice and system integration for military bases, to meteorological monitoring for municipalities, there's no industry we don't touch to provide life-saving alerts to. What makes ASC unique is more than just our comprehensive industry knowledge—it's our status as a fully-integrated, single supplier of technologies. We don't just make the components for your early-warning system: we also supply the tailored software to tie everything together in a way that allows for seamless functionality, state-of-the-art features and encompassing peace of mind.

ASC is more than just a supplier of mass notification systems—we deliver solutions that save lives.
