Overview

TalkingPoints is a two-way multilingual communication platform that focuses on increasing meaningful family engagement. We enable instant, translated messaging between school staff, families, and students over age 13. Teachers use a web or mobile application to send messages and announcements to families, who then receive them in their home language as text messages or through the TalkingPoints free family mobile app. Families respond in their preferred language and TalkingPoints translates their messages back into English. Messages can be sent to individual families, families of students in specific classes or groups, or to all the families in school. Since TalkingPoints sends communication via text messages, our solution is accessible for all parents who own a simple mobile phone - no smartphone, computer, or Wi-Fi required. This ensures that all families can easily communicate with their schools regardless of their language background, income level or access to technology! TalkingPoints invests deeply in translation, and offers the highest-quality, contextually relevant translations so that all families can participate in their children's education. TalkingPoints is the only platform with a proprietary translation solution that's always improving based on data from professional human translation, culturally-specific education glossaries, conversation data analysis and user inputs, custom machine learning models, and data from public and neural translation engines.
